Fedorchak Joins Board of Directors

January 2, 2007

The Little Forks Conservancy is pleased to announce the addition of Brad Fedorchak to its board of directors.

Brad joined the board of directors because he felt "the State of Michigan and the Midland area is blessed with an abundance of natural beauty. The woods, streams, lakes and rivers have provided some of my most enjoyable times and memories. Hunting, fishing, mushroom hunting or just walking in the woods are all important today and need to be preserved and available for future generations."

He added, "The Little Forks Conservancy provides a unique way for landowners and the community to partner, benefit and preserve our outdoor heritage for years to come."

Brad started his career in 1984 at The Dow Chemical Company Michigan Operations. After serving a variety of roles in Michigan, he relocated to Freeport, Texas, where he was a production leader. Earlier this year, Brad returned to Michigan to assume the role of responsible care leader for Michigan Operations.

Brad graduated with honors from Youngstown State University, earning a degree in chemical engineering.

Brad and his wife, Lynda, have three children: Kelli, 19; Jake, 18; and Jordan, 12.

Brad enjoys hunting, fishing, boating, skiing, snowmobiling and golf but spends most of his free time at his children's activities.

Steve Kin, president of the board of directors, said, "Brad is an excellent addition to Board of the Little Forks Conservancy. He brings new energy and expertise that will help the Conservancy stay fresh and responsive to the conservation needs of the community. We look forward to working with Brad to protect many special places across the mid-Michigan over the next few years."
